Personal Representative Duties and Processes

THE DUTIES OF A PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE

Before the assets of a deceased person's (the decedent) estate may be distributed to heirs or devisees, certain legal requirements must be met. First, a Personal Representative must be appointed by the Court. Once this has occurred, the Personal Representative is responsible for addressing any claims by creditors of the estate, and for distributing the estate's assets.

This is a guide to those seeking to utilize the process of informal probate through the Probate Court. It does not address every issue or question that may arise. Nor does it provide legal advice. You are encouraged to consult an attorney if you have questions about the law or process.

Here is a glossary of terms that defines legal terminology with which you may not be familiar:

GLOSSARY OF TERMS

The deceased person whose estate is the subject of the probate process.

BEGIN THE PROCESS:
APPOINTMENT OF A PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE
Who and How...

WHO:

The Probate Court may only appoint certain individuals under a priority system established by statute. Those individuals may include: the individual named as Personal Representative in the Will (if one exists); the surviving spouse, heirs or devisees or other interested person.

HOW:

The person seeking to establish his or her legal authority as the Personal Representative may apply through the Probate Court. A packet of forms and instructions is available at the Los Alamos County Clerk's Office or on-line at the New Mexico Supreme Court website: <http://www.supremecourtlawlibrary.org/prob.htm>.

The forms and instructions differ depending on whether the decedent died with or without a Will. If the applicant is acting without an attorney, use of these forms is strongly encouraged as the New Mexico Supreme Court has determined that they meet legal requirements. Individuals intending to use these forms should read the instructions carefully as they identify what forms are needed at each phase of the probate.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE ESTATE

Creditors have two (2) months after the mailing of the written notice or the first publication of the published notice to submit a claim against the Estate to the Personal Representative.

- 1) The Personal Representative has 60 days to notify the creditor whether the claim is accepted or rejected. If this deadline is not met, the claim will be deemed a valid claim.
- 2) The Personal Representative pays valid claims from the assets of the Estate or makes other arrangements to do so.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE ASSETS

Before the Personal Representative distributes the assets to heirs and/or devisees, he or she must pay the New Mexico family and personal property allowances (if any), federal and state income and estate taxes (if owed), and other bills. The Personal Representative should also pay the costs of administering the estate, such as appraiser fees, publication fees and other similar costs, before asset distribution.

The provisions of the Will or the intestate laws, if no Will exists, dictate how the assets should be distributed.

- The heirs and devisees may agree to a different asset distribution from the terms of the Will or intestate succession laws, but the agreement must be:
 - 1) in writing;
 - 2) signed by all who are affected by the agreement;
 - 3) and filed with the Court.

ACCOUNTING

Before the Personal Representative can close the probate, he must provide an Accounting to all parties who received assets of the estate. The accounting lists the value and distribution of the estate assets. The accounting need not be filed with the Court.
